

MEYER CANCER CENTER COMMUNITY ADVISORY BOARD MEMBERS

MAHA ATTIEH,
ARAB-AMERICAN FAMILY SUPPORT CENTER

Maha Attieh is the Lead Health Program Navigator at the Arab American Family Support Center. She began working at the organization in 2003 to improve Arab Americans' access to healthcare, particularly among non-English speakers. Her commitment to providing Arab American communities with health and education services also led to her becoming involved with other initiatives in New York City, including the State University of New York Downstate Medical Center community outreach committee; the New York Immigration Coalition; the New York City Language Access Committee; and the Khalil Gibran International Academy in Brooklyn. Since 2013, Maha has served as an Arabic-speaking NYS of Health Navigator with the only Arab-American agency. In December 2019, she was appointed by the Commissioner of Health for New York State, Dr. Howard Zucker, to the Marketplace Advisory Committee.

JAKO DOUGLAS-BORREN, BROOKLYN COMMUNITY PRIDE CENTER

Jako Douglas-Borren is the Director of Programs at the Brooklyn Community Pride Center. With a background in the financial sector, Jako transitioned to the nonprofit sector in 2006, joining the Bedford Stuyvesant Restoration Corporation in 2007 where he initially served as a consultant in arts administration and later on as the Director of Program Operations. This position enabled him to combine his experience in business development and customer service with his passion for community development. Currently, working for Brooklyn Community Pride Center, Jako heads up programs, servicing Brooklyn LGBTQ+ residents. In this capacity he is supporting the Center in its growth, working with the staff and a community close to his heart.

ALEXINA CATHER,
HUNTER COLLEGE NEW YORK CITY FOOD
POLICY CENTER

Alexina Cather, MPH, is the Deputy Director at the Hunter College New York City Food Policy Center where she works to develop innovative, evidence-based solutions to prevent diet-related diseases and protect food security. She works closely with policy makers, community organizations, advocates and the public to create healthier, more sustainable food environments and to use food to promote community and economic development. Ms. Cather works tirelessly to connect community-based organizations, academics, advocates and entrepreneurs to combat hunger and other food-related issues such as food waste, food insecurity, food inequity and access to nutritious, whole foods in underserved communities in New York City and beyond.

She previously worked as a project manager at the Center for Behavioral Cardiovascular Health at Columbia University Medical Center on a number of research initiatives targeted at improving cardiovascular health among New York City residents.

Prior to joining the New York City Food Policy Center, Ms. Cather was a contributing writer for Food Tank, where she wrote about our food system and helped to promote a global community for safe, healthy, nourished eaters. Before moving to New York City, Ms. Cather worked as a family resource coordinator and a science teacher at UCSF Benioff Children's Hospital Oakland where she worked to provide children receiving medical assistance and their families with healthy food, education and social and emotional support. Additionally, she worked to promote female empowerment and healthy bodies through her work coaching soccer for a number of girls' soccer teams in the Bay Area and through her travels to West Africa to coach girls soccer in Ghana.

Ms. Cather currently serves on the boards of the NY State Chapter of Slow Food USA and the NYC Healthy School Food Alliance.
